

77°

TRENDING

Hispanic Heritage Month

Rebound: Local Innovation

Clear the Shelters

COVI...

MONEY REPORT

In partnership with

NEW YORK

Spouses in Divorce Proceedings Are Using Cryptocurrency to Hide Money. Here's How Experts Find It

By Kate Dore, CNBC • Published June 1, 2021 • Updated on June 1, 2021 at 6:59 pm

Getty Images

Divorcees Are Using Cryptocurrency to Hide Money. Here's How Experts Find It

- Some spouses are using cryptocurrency to hide money during divorce settlements.
- Tracking down hidden digital currency can be a challenge, according to experts.
- Divorce attorneys discuss how experts may uncover someone's secret cryptocurrency stash.

The dramatic rise of cryptocurrency has led to some spouses hiding those digital assets during divorce settlements, and tracking down the funds isn't easy, experts say.

Our redesigned local news and weather app is live! Download it for Apple or Android— and sign up for alerts.

More than 20 million Americans may own cryptocurrency, industry groups say, and digital currency market values grew to a record \$2 trillion in April. These spikes may be enticing more spouses in divorce proceedings or those thinking about divorce to conceal their stash, experts say.

"I'm sure it's been an issue the whole time," says Sandra Radna, a divorce attorney based on Long Island, New York. "The level of awareness for divorce attorneys is very recent."

Money Report

6 MINS AGO

NY Attorney General Letitia James Held Private Talks About Running for Governor in Wake of Cuomo Resignation

1 HOUR AGO

The Major Thing People Are Missing About the Covid Boosters Conversation

Here's how experts are tracking down a spouse's hidden funds.

More from Personal Finance:

Dividing cryptocurrency in a divorce settlement is complicated

Bitcoin crash opens door to a tax loophole for investors

Biden's plans may drop a tax bomb on divorcing couples

"The hardest part for attorneys is first to determine whether there was an investment," says Radna.

"And then, once you have that suspicion, to go after it."

While some spouses in a divorce know about cryptocurrency from past conversations, others may suspect hidden funds based on their spouse's lifestyle changes, she said.

For example, their spouse may suddenly have a bunch of extra money or they may make a large purchase, such as an expensive new car.

If a spouse thinks there may be significant amounts of hidden cryptocurrency, an attorney may file a subpoena, or court order, to get access to their spouse's computer or electronic devices, Radna says.

There are several ways to find secret cryptocurrency accounts.

VIDEO 7:58

A key pattern suggests bitcoin will crash to $20K

Forensic experts may scour electronically stored information for digital currency ticker symbols or search devices for login credentials.

They may also check for confirmation emails from exchanges or transfer activity on bank statements. There may even be records of cryptocurrency income on past tax returns.

A spouse may also have listed cryptocurrency on past loan applications to boost their chances of approval, Radna said.

Difficult to track

While older cryptocurrencies like bitcoin or ethereum may be easier to track, others may be more difficult for experts to find.

For example, monero, dash, zcash, PIVX, verge, horizen and grin are among the most anonymous cryptocurrency, said Radna.

Other challenges may arise when dealing with foreign cryptocurrency exchanges.

While attorneys can subpoena U.S.-based exchanges, it may be tough to get records from foreign companies, said Chicago-based divorce attorney Patrick Markey.

Expensive to track

Of course, spouses need to weigh the cost before embarking on a cryptocurrency hunt. Before starting, a spouse may complete an analysis to gauge how much money they may be trying to track down.

"We're looking for people that have made significant amounts of money for it to be worth the investigation," said Radna.

Forensic experts typically charge hourly and may be costly, depending on the number of electronic devices and volume of information, she said.

Moreover, the divorce attorney has to spend extra time reviewing what forensic experts find to make a legal argument to the court.

"If it's $5,000 [of cryptocurrency], it's really not worth it," she said.

Planning ahead

The spouse with less money should do some planning before going forward with the divorce, said Radna. They may start gathering information and tallying the marital assets.

"As they start putting that together, they'll probably start seeing holes," she said.

The spouse may check joint accounts to see if money is missing, and if the spouse knows a specific cryptocurrency account exists, their attorney may request access.

"It's really about getting as much information as you can about how they're buying it," said Markey.

Missing money may suggest a gambling problem, offshore bank accounts, an extramarital affair, another family or cryptocurrency, Radna said.

"And once you have an idea of the value of what's missing, or what might have been invested, then your attorney can do the rest of the work," she added.

Also on CNBC

- Before you start some post-pandemic spending, make these money moves
- Millions of Americans could face eviction as housing protection expires in June
- Cryptocurrency poses a significant risk of tax evasion

 [Subscribe to the
CNBC YouTube
Channel](#)

SQUAWK BOX Morning Squawk
Newsletter

Copyright CNBCs - CNBC

This article tagged under:

NEW YORK • PERSONAL FINANCE • LIFE • CRYPTOCURRENCY • DEBT

American Dog Owners: Your Best Friend Deserves Better Food

The Farmer's Dog | Sponsored

Learn More

Where Is Gabby? Fla. Cops Say Fiancé of Missing NY Woman Refuses to Talk, Is Person Of Interest

Police in North Port, Florida, announced that the fiancé of a Long Island woman who went missing while traveling through Wyoming is a person of interest in...

NBC 5 Dallas-Fort Worth

SPONSORED • THE MOTLEY FOOL

Motley Fool's Top Stock Picks

SPONSORED • SELECT JUSTICE

Roundup Settlement 2021: For Diagnosed With Non-...

SPONSORED • ALL THINGS AUTO | SEARCH ...

New Kia's Finally On Sale

SPONSORED • THE MOTLEY FOOL

Omaha legend puts $91 billion on one 5G stock

SPONSORED • ALL THINGS APPAREL | SEARCH ADS

Carhartt's New Line Of Gear is Tremendous

SPONSORED • ETORO CRYPTO UPDATES

Bitcoin for beginners: what you need to know before...

Weather Forecast

DALLAS, TX

77°

Fair

0% Precip

TONIGHT

73°

TOMORROW

93°

CONTACT USKXAS Public Inspection FileFCC ApplicationsPrivacy PolicyDo Not Sell My Personal InformationKXAS Employment InformationTERMS OF SERVICEAdvertise with usSend FeedbackCA NoticeAd ChoicesNEWSLETTERS*TV LISTINGS*SUBMIT PHOTOS OR VIDEO

Copyright © 2021 NBCUniversal Media, LLC. All rights reserved